

Children Who Made a Difference

Malala Yousafzai

Bravely speaking out for what she believed, Malala Yousafzai has become a world-renowned advocate for girls' education.

From a young age, she loved learning and dreamed of every child going to school. In her home country of Pakistan, some people did not want girls to go to school.

Determined to make a difference, Malala Yousafzai began writing about her life and sharing her message far and wide.

She spoke courageously on television and gave many newspaper interviews. Around the world, people began to listen.

Her message was getting through! Because of her powerful words, more people started to understand the importance of education for everyone.

Later, Yousafzai founded a charity to help children attend school safely. Passionate about fairness, she continues to fight for education and equal rights. She demonstrated that, despite her young age, one person can inspire millions. Through her activism, she proved that education really can change the world.

Greta Thunberg

Greta Thunberg began campaigning to protect our planet when she was just a teenager. Living in Sweden, she learned about climate change and became deeply concerned about the damage being done to the Earth. As an Autistic person, Greta Thunberg says she sees the world differently. She has expressed that this helps her focus deeply and speak clearly about what is right. Every Friday, instead of going to school, she sat outside her country's government building with a sign that read "School Strike for Climate."

Soon after, young people across the globe joined her, creating a powerful movement called 'Fridays for Future'.

Through spirited speeches, Thunberg told world leaders to take real action. Thanks to her, millions of children felt inspired to raise their voices too.

Against all odds, she became one of the most famous climate activists in the world. With bravery and purpose, Thunberg proved that young people can change everything.

Ryan Hreljac

At just 6 years old, Canadian Ryan Hreljac decided he wanted to make a difference in the world.

After learning at school that some people in Africa didn't have access to clean water, he was shocked and determined to help. With incredible focus, he did extra chores and raised enough money to build a well for a village in Uganda.

Even though he was only a child, Ryan Hreljac believed that one person could make a big difference.

Before long, his kindness spread. Amazingly, his small idea grew into an organisation, which has now built hundreds of wells around the world. Due to Hreljac's hard work, thousands of people now have access to safe water.

Hreljac's inspiring determination showed that children are powerful, too. All around the world, young people saw what he did and felt brave enough to help others themselves. Through compassion and action, he proved that no one is too young to change lives.

Disclaimer: We hope you find the information and resources on our website useful. Please be aware that aspects of an individual's life may be controversial to some. Due to this, we highly recommend that you carefully research the individual before teaching about them to learners. If your learners do independent research about an individual, we advise using only pre-selected, appropriate sources of information and websites appropriate to their age.